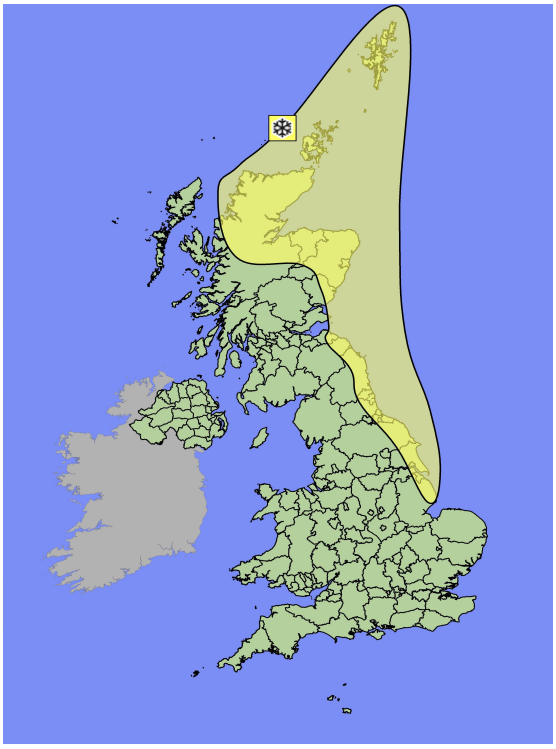
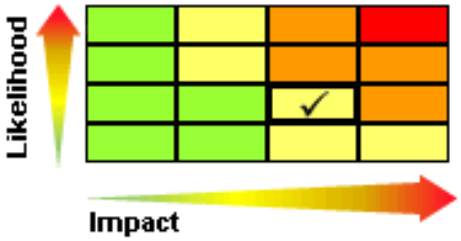
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
Brisk northerly winds will bring frequent snow and hail showers, some of them heavy, into northeastern Britain, with greatest accumulations over higher ground, where temporary blizzard conditions are likely during heavier showers. Icy stretches are expected to be additional hazard, primarily on untreated roads and pavements.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Snow

Valid from 17:00 on Tue, 12th Mar 2013 until 11:00 on Wed, 13th Mar 2013

Snow showers will affect parts of northern and eastern Scotland from Tuesday evening, spreading to parts of northeastern and eastern England overnight and into Wednesday morning. Accumulations of snow will be rather variable at lower levels but with 1-3 cm in places overnight. Meanwhile, over higher ground, localised accumulations of 5-10 cm are possible.

The public should be aware of the potential for disruption, especially to travel.
